Public Art Plan Proposal for the University of Wyoming
Submitted by Jennifer McGregor and Renee Piechocki
October 9, 2017

Overview

In September 2017, we visited the University of Wyoming to meet with members of the campus community to discuss opportunities for public art on campus. We observed sincere enthusiasm for new public art, a desire to increase awareness about the University’s existing collection, and the need for a system to inventory the existing collection, commission new public art, and raise awareness about art on campus.

This proposal outlines our recommendations for developing a public art plan that will serve as a roadmap to guide future public art decisions. This document will be tailored to the University of Wyoming’s specific needs, while being aligned with current best practices in the field of public art.

Process

We propose a public art planning process that will engage the campus community in its development. The timing is important because the public art plan can be a tool to further the the goals of Breaking Through 2017-2022: A Strategic Plan for the University of Wyoming. The public art plan will also guide how public art can be included in upcoming campus capital plans, such as the University Housing Master Plan.

We understand the importance of an inclusive process and will plan sessions around your specific needs. The process will build on the excitement and interest in public art expressed by students, faculty, staff, and Laramie residents.

Phase 1: Listening and Learning

During our September 2017 trip we gained an understanding of the existing collection and learned about new capital projects as well as areas of the campus where people would like to see temporary and permanent art. We presented different types of projects for campuses that engage people, the campus landscape, the subject areas, and also relate to the particular cadence of the campus timeframe. A report is attached to this proposal.

Phase 2: Research, Benchmarking, and Public Art Week

During the next phase, we will research public art programs at land grant universities such as the University of Iowa as well as other leading university programs across the country. From our initial research we have identified the University of Washington, Stuart Collection at the University of California at San Diego, Landmarks at the University of Texas at Austin, and will research others. We will be looking closely at public and private funding sources; the role of the public art committee; and how students, faculty and staff engage in the public art process.
Understanding the importance of interdisciplinary activity, we will also look for campuses that encourage this engagement. Our research will entail phone interviews and a benchmarking trip to at least one campus.

Concurrently, we will develop a menu of public art strategies that are aligned with Breaking Through 2017-2022: A Strategic Plan for the University of Wyoming, and the aspirations and needs identified during Phase 1. The menu will include public art project strategies and locations, as well recommendations for appropriate administrative framework and budget to further the plan.

We would like to return to the University of Wyoming for five days in January 2018 to present our initial ideas to a number of different groups: President’s office, Public Art Committee, students, faculty, staff and possibly trustees. During this public art week, we will have complement meetings with the leadership teams with campus community workshops that will explore some of the initial ideas. In addition, we envision hosting at least one additional event that is open to the public.

If a meeting with the Trustees is desired, this phase might take place between January 18 and 23, 2018 to overlap with their meeting and the start of the semester on Jan 22, 2018.

During this phase, we will rely on the Public Art Committee and ASUW to help us communicate our plans to the campus community through media alerts, social media outlets, flyer distribution and more. We also anticipate that we can work with the University’s communications staff to distribute a survey or other method of participation to get feedback from people who can’t attend in person.

Phase 3: Draft and Refine the Plan

Feedback received during this trip will inform the direction of the public art plan. We will spend 4-6 weeks drafting the public art plan and intend to deliver a first draft to the public art committee by the end of March 2018. We would like to work with the public art committee to have feedback and a refined draft by April.

At this time, our current vision for plan contents includes:
- A vision for public art on campus
- Role and composition of the Public Art Committee
- Public art administrative expertise/framework needed
- Outline of acquisition and deaccession policies
- Strategies for accessing different funding streams
- Strategies to engage the entire campus community and the city
- Menu of potential projects, location, type, selection method, budget
- Implementation timeline & next steps
Working with the Public Art Committee campus community will result in refining this list of plan contents above.

We anticipate that several members of the Public Art Committee will be available to review sections of the plan as developed.

We would like to travel to the University of Wyoming in late April or early May to present the refined draft plan to the campus community. We look forward to working with you to determine the groups that should be included.

Phase 4: Final Plan
Your comments will be incorporated into a final plan which we will present in Person. The final product will be a word document and a PDF that includes images. We anticipate hiring a designer who we have worked with in the past to create a visual framework for the document. The document will include an executive summary that can be used to tell the story concisely. We look forward to delivering the final public art plan by May 31, 2018.
