Addendum B

The ASUW Programmatic Fee Review Committee voted to approve the College of Education's $4.00 increase proposal. The Committee cited that:

- Prior to Programmatic Fees, the College of Education charged students a fee of $34 per semester for computing fees
  - These fees were to cover the cost of maintenance of the College's labs and other equipment (the labs are not supported by IT)
  - Students have access to these labs for use, and the College also provides rentals of iPads, cameras and other equipment
- The $34 fee was not rolled into the current fee of $22 per credit hour
- This increase would put the fee at $26 per credit hour and revenue would increase by approximately $35,500
  - This would cover the financial deficit from the loss of the computing fee
- If the original Programmatic Fee had included the computing fee, then this increase would not be needed

The ASUW Programmatic Fee Review Committee voted against the Advising Fee's proposed $2.00 increase. The Committee cited that:

- This increase would be intended to mainly support the College of Arts & Sciences
- While centralized advising is beneficial and would improve the College of Arts & Sciences:
  - The College of Arts & Sciences should evaluate how it's budget could be better used to support professional advisor cost
    - The College had a surplus of approximately $235,000 from FY19 Program Fees
  - Other Programs use part of their fees to support salaries of professional advising
  - There seems to be a systematic issue with the advising setup within the College of Arts & Sciences, and more money may not be the right solution to this issue
- Senate Resolution #2678 was passed by the ASUW Senate
  - This resolution opposed the $2.00 increase and cited student input

The ASUW Programmatic Fee Review Committee voted against a proposed $1.00 increase to the Advising Fee. The Committee cited that:

- The $1.00 increase would be intended to cover the deficit of the initial Advising Fee budget
  - Anticipated $1.3 million and only received $1.2 million
- The Advising Council can work with the budget to move monies around appropriately
- Many departments around campus will have to make tough decisions during the budget season, but not all can request a fee increase through students to alleviate these issues
- Student Success Priorities may be a more appropriate area to help ACES and the overall advising processes and fees
