Topics Discussed:

Forestry BMPs are a set of recommended practices designed to protect soil and water resources during resource management activities by limiting soil disturbance, preventing soil erosion and protecting sensitive areas. While the implementation of forestry BMPs is voluntary in Wyoming, private Industry, state and federal agencies have taken the initiative to hold training sessions and conduct field audits in a system of continual self-monitoring and improvement.

These workshops will consist of classroom presentations and a brief field visit nearby. Objectives are to acquaint participants with the Wyoming Best Management Practices and review implementation measures. Emphasis will be placed upon stream crossings, streamside management zones and road drainage structures and maintenance.
