

Here's what's new in Barnyards & Backyards

By Tony Hoch, Magazine Coordinator

Thank you for picking up this issue of Barnyards & Backyards! The team continues to receive positive feedback on the magazine, the Web site, and all the great workshops held around the state this spring and summer. We are continually looking for ways to keep the project fresh.

In this issue, we introduce the newest facet to the rural living program: the property improvement and management program – or the “Extreme Property Makeover!”

Over the next several issues, we will follow two properties, the landowners, and local management experts as they attempt to improve land resources in a collaborative effort. The process will include identifying issues, planning, and implementing new management practices to improve or eliminate problems.

These case studies will offer a real synthesis of the topics covered in the magazine as we follow the team’s ups and downs in tackling real-life land management issues on the ground. You can visit our Web site to view the latest news. If a member of Facebook, type Barnyards&Backyards in the search function to find the property improvement page. Open, and become a fan. If not a member of Facebook, type “Facebook barnyards and backyards” into any search engine to view the page. Also, note that we’re still looking for more property owners to participate, particularly if they have a rural home or farm in a forested area.

If you do visit our Web site, you will see it has been updated and upgraded and is now easier to use. Take a look at www.barnyardsandbackyards.com.

If you would like to be notified about timely events, publications, articles, audio clips, and videos that may be of interest, join the Barnyards & Backyards e-mail listserv by simply entering your e-mail address and clicking a button on our Web site! The listserv averages about one or two short messages a week (your address will be used for this purpose only, and you can unsubscribe at any time). Just visit the Web site to sign-up.
