

Trimerotropis agrestis

Trimerotropis agrestis occurs on sand dunes and sandhills in Wyoming east of Rawlins. West of Rawlins it is replaced by the related T. barnumi. It prefers barren sand with sparse grasses or forbs. Eggs overwinter in the soil. Adults were collected from mid August to mid November. Its feeding habits are not reported in Wyoming but because of limited habitat and scarcity it is not considered a pest.

Ref: Otte 1984, and Capinera and Sechrist 1982.