English 1010 is designed to prepare students for the types of writing expected at UW. At the end of the semester, students should be able to complete an expository and a research essay that reflect students' own point of view and that demonstrate thoughtful engagement with complex readings at some length. In order to do that, we will work with the types of texts common in the University and use these texts as evidence to support students' own argument.

To get to this larger goal, English 1010 focuses on three smaller goals: read extended expository writings from a range of disciplines by area experts who are writing for a non-specialized audience write summaries, synthesis, and analyses of these texts use these texts as support for your own argument We will pursue these goals in all of the essays throughout the semester.

This course is an introduction to study in the Humanities, a field devoted to asking questions about the various texts around us religious discourse, historical analysis, aesthetic and intellectual theory, popular culture – and analyzing the ways in which these texts participate in the construction of both individual and cultural "truth." In this introduction we'll focus on the seemingly "innocent" media of film as the text for study.

This is a first-year composition course with intercultural diversity. Students in this learning community act as cultural informants in an environment that promotes an intercultural awareness of and respect for cultural differences. Students are exposed to rhetorical concerns, critical thinking skills, research methods, and techniques of oral presentation. Written essays explore intercultural communication in everyday life, in applied settings, in education, and in the role of language (verbal and non-verbal) as a significant assimilator. International students will receive language acquisition support in listening comprehension and oral and written fluency. NOTE: 1210 restricted to non-native students.

This course develops writing styles, writing techniques, document design and formatting strategies, and audience/readership considerations that are specifically suited to technological and scientific fields of study. The course concludes with a comprehensive, student-directed long form report. NOTE: Computer classroom section. WB

Prerequisite of sophomore standing

Topic: Hollywood Masculinities

Cross listed with WMST 2060

In this WB course, we will concentrate upon the analytical writing process: from gathering evidence to support your textual interpretation, developing an incisive thesis statement, producing a coherent argument filled with textual detail which students will fully explain to demonstrate how the data supports their thesis. We will brainstorm, write, and revise. This particular course concentrates upon film as its “literature”; the course’s informal title is “Hollywood Masculinities.” Students must be willing to devote time out of class to seeing more than once American films, from the 1950s to today, which construct various ideological notions of masculinity. Also, as an introduction to film class, we will learn how to understand how the particular parts of the film add up to its entire effect. Thus students will master such terms as “establishing shot,” “mise-en-scene,” “personality star v. actor star.” Our texts will be Boggs & Petrie’s The Art of Watching Films and Andrea Lunsford’s The Everyday Writer. The requirements for this course include mandatory attendance, in-class peer editing workshops, examinations, and many essays, culminating in a research paper which uses MLA format.

ENGL 2050 1 CW:Fiction TR 11:00am 12:15pm HO 108 Bergstraesser

This course is designed to help you craft various works of short fiction. In addition to in-class writing exercises, creative assignments outside of class, and discussions, we will critique each other’s writing in a constructive workshop atmosphere. Through lecture and discussion, we will explore the technique and devices involved in creating fiction: plot/structure, character, setting, point of view, theme, style, and several others. We will read and discuss the short fiction of many different writers, using their technique and content as a guide for our own writing.

ENGL 2050 2 CW:Fiction M 06:10pm 09:10pm HO 121B Pexton, V
This class introduces students to the tools needed to write and revise good short fiction. We will accomplish this through in and out of class writing exercises, class discussion and workshops. Good writers are also careful, critical readers, so another goal is to improve your skills as good readers. Along with weekly readings in short fiction and many writing exercises, students will be expected to write and revise two complete short stories for a final portfolio. Prerequisite: WA.

This introductory course will familiarize students with the depth and breadth of American Indian literature. Of special interest will be the way American Indian authors deconstruct stereotypes, combine both Western and American Indian traditions in their writings to create a unique canon of American literature, and redefine and grapple with notions of Indian identity and authenticity. Requirements: Regular class attendance; mid-term exam; final research paper. Required Texts: Nothing But The Truth: An Anthology of Native American Literature—ed., James Purdy; The Way To Rainy Mountain—N. Scott Momaday; One Good Story, That One—Thomas King; The Lone Ranger and Tonto Fistfight in Heaven—Sherman Alexie; Ceremony—Leslie Silko; Tracks—Louise Erdrich.

This course fulfills the Diversity in the U.S. (D) requirement and the Cultural Context–Humanities (CH) requirement of the 2003 University Studies Program.

This course will focus on writing for magazines and other sorts of publications where you might work as a regular employee or as a freelancer. You'll learn how to pitch and then write the sorts of stories editors want. To paraphrase from our course text, we'll start with how to construct compelling stories, find sources, get good quotes, and compile research. We'll explore how to market your work and write query letters tailored to specific publications that will impress editors. Then we’ll get you prepared for the real world – working with editors who rewrite extensively, pay late, or otherwise drop off the face of the earth. Your instructor has experience with all of the above and especially with the very positive results of freelance writing.

ENGL 4090 1 Film & Religion
cross listed with RELI 4090-01
R  06:30pm 10:30pm CR 302
Flesher/Torry

Film is one of the most powerful media in the modern world and its use of religion has helped to make it so. This course analyzes how film makers use religion and religious themes to depict ideals and behavior as well as to promote social positions. We will look at how religion provides the narrative structure for films making their plots clear and compelling. Possible films to be studied include: Matrix, Life of Brian, Exorcist, Star Wars, 2001, and E.T. Prerequisites: 6 hours of 2000-level or higher literature courses or religion courses or consent of instructor.

ENGL 4110 2 Shakesp: Comed/Hist
TR 01:20pm 02:35pm CR 144
Parolin, P

This course is an intensive study of eight of Shakespeare’s histories and comedies, written in the first half of his career in the London theater. We will attend to issues of linguistic innovation and play, the exploration of character and relationships, the institution of the theater, and the historical context of the plays. We will ask questions like the following: What are the defining features of history plays and comedies? When and why do the distinctions between the genres blur? How do the different genres respond to different ideas about society? Why do men dominate the histories while women feature more prominently in the comedies? How do concepts like masculinity and femininity come into being and what kind of stories do they underwrite? Does gender influence the presentation of issues like love, war, dynastic ambition, and family politics? Do the plays support or critique dominant attitudes about men and women? What is the nature and purpose of theater in Shakespeare’s time? How do both the comedies and the histories exploit the resources of theater to create illusion and, sometimes, to break it down? How does Shakespeare use the tools and techniques of theater to envision social conflict and social harmony? How does the theater help Shakespeare – and us – explore the many facets of identity and faces of society?

The format of the course will combine lecture and discussion. Course requirements will include class discussion, short response papers, a longer final paper, two exams, and some modest in-class performance. Plays to be studied may include The Comedy of Errors, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Much Ado About Nothing, Twelfth Night, Richard II, Henry IV Part I, Henry IV Part II, and Henry V.

ENGL 4210 1 18C English Lit
TR 09:35am 10:50am EN 3105
Reverand, C

An intriguing period in English literary history, sometimes called the Age of Satire, but also the age that saw the birth of the novel, as well as a new kind of theatre, comedy of manners (the plays are still considered the funniest, as well as the dirtiest, in English literature), and the first newspapers. This period includes such events as the London’s Great Plague (1665), then the Fire of London (1666), the rebuilding of London after the Fire, not one but two political revolutions, three international wars, the invention of the National Debt, the discovery of that new-fangled drink, coffee, the founding of the Royal Society. This is the age with Bach, Scarlatti, and Handel at one end (all born in 1685) and Mozart (born 1756) at the other, as well as the age of baroque art and architecture, led in England by Christopher Wren, John Vanbrugh (also a playwright) and Nicholas Hawksmoor. We will be working primarily with the literature, but we will supplement this by studying the historical and artistic context as well (you will learn about great houses and landscape gardening, among other things). Authors we will be reading include John Dryden, Alexander Pope, and Jonathan Swift, playwrights such as William Congreve, Vanbrugh, William Wycherley, and Oliver Goldsmith, diarist Samuel Pepys (who recorded every play he saw, every sermon he heard, and every seduction he attempted), essayists Joseph Addison and Richard Steele, among others. There will be a final, four papers (around 8 pages apiece), and various other inventive projects (e.g., students may be asked to prepare a scene from a play, or write a parody of a Spectator paper). Prerequisite: 6 hours of 2000-level literature courses or consent of instructor.

Before the Victorian period the British novel was oddly unlike itself. No one knew what this new genre was supposed to look like, and so everyone experimented wildly. A London printer's hack imagined the true lie of a desert island (Defoe); a prudish businessman produced moral tales couched in prurient love notes (Richardson); a minister of the church wrote of textus interruptus (Sterne); a Scottish doctor went on the road (Smollett); a mysterious lady imagined terror in the text (Radcliffe). As we turn to the nineteenth century, a quiet spinster wondered about the perils of irresponsible reading through such varied texts (Austen); a lawyer broke the rules of personal, political and publishing etiquette (Scott); a slave tried to tell her story through the voices available—not her own (Mary Prince); and a slave-owner struggled to tell his tale as romance (Marly). The bounds of life, art, truth, fiction, gender, genre, home, and away bent and shifted in a period of unprecedented literary creativity.

We will bend and shift the usual shape of a novel class, folding in fairy tale and letter, travelogue and naughty magazine as we seek to honor and enact the oddity of eighteenth-century creativity. We will read strategically (some of these are big books, and we will split them among us). Assignments will be conventional but also exploratory, including close reading, argumentative essay, conference performance, and background presentation.

This course will explore the richness and variety of what we loosely term “modern” poetry – written between 1855 and the present – concentrating on its most important international figures and movements. Although we will pay particular attention to poems written in English, our approach will be global and cosmopolitan; we will consider the flowering of Anglo-American modernism not in isolation, but as one partner in a series of cross-pollinations with Continental, Latin American and Asian traditions. We begin with the image of the city, how the idea of modernity is constructed against a backdrop of the urban and the urbane. Along the way, we'll consider such topics as the birth of aestheticism (or “art for art’s sake”), the formation of avant-garde, the troubled relation of poetry to politics, the divergence of radical and conservative Modernisms, the influence of psychology and philosophy, and parallel movements in music, painting and cinema. Readings will include poems and essays by Emerson, Poe, Whitman, Baudelaire, Rimbaud, Mallarmé, Rilke, Cavafy, Tagore, Yeats, the Futurists, Imagists, and Surrealists, Stein, Williams, Stevens, Eliot, Auden, García Lorca, Neruda, Ginsberg, Lowell, O'Hara, Heaney and Walcott. All non-English works read in translation. Assignments will include weekly reading journal, class presentation, midterm and final exams, and two book reviews. Prerequisite: 6 hours of 2000-level literature courses.

A survey and study of mostly contemporary American short stories, although we also will cover some stories in translation as well as some older, well-known short stories. Emphasis will be on understanding how these stories work, narrative voice, structure, and other elements in detail. Students will write at least one critical paper and have the option to write one paper that uses creative and critical responses to the reading.

<td>Senior Seminar, traditionally a smorgasbord of poststructuralist theories as they are applied to literary texts, will focus more intently in this section on the act of critical interpretation. We will probe questions that may vex serious students of literature: how do two individuals arrive at two completely different, yet accurate, interpretations of the same text? What value is there in divergent readings? These central questions will be supplemented by forays into postcolonialism, poststructuralism, literary theory, and, if time permits, cognitive language reception theory. Assignments will include quizzes, frequent papers, a research essay, exams, and a semester-ending public presentation of your final research project.</td>

Do you want to know what you've been doing all this time? This course boosts undergraduate students to awareness of English as a profession. It encourages students to consider how and why they might communicate English to audiences both less and more knowledgable than themselves. Thus, it introduces students to critical theory, so that they may become aware of the choices inherent in their interpretations of texts and in their approaches to audiences. And it does so in seriously interesting and challenging ways.

We will tumble down the theoretical rabbit hole in Alice in Wonderland (and Through the Looking Glass), upset the student populace by teaching Macbeth through theory, chase theory to the outposts of empire and back in Dracula, and conclude by recognizing how literary theory reconstructs our modern world in Monty Python. Assignments will be frequent, but varied, and should prove compelling. Materials will span the extent of literary practice—film; cartoon; lit; etc. For our last daredevil feat, the class will produce and perform a professional conference. After that, you will be able to do anything!

This course is W3/WC, and required for English majors.

Depending on context, "state" might refer to a political entity — "heads of state convened in Brussels" — or to a condition — "I'm in a New York state of mind." In this course, we will read various novels in which the protagonist’s "state" of being reflects the political "state" in which he/she is a citizen, exploring whether and how the literary convention of correlating the protagonist’s internal condition and external conditions sheds light on such issues as self-determination, citizenship, justice, identity, and so on.

This course introduces new teachers of First Year Composition (FYC) to Writing Studies research and theory so that they can apply to these lessons to their pedagogy, in particular their pedagogy in English 1010. In the beginning of the semester, I assign the readings and class activities. Toward the end of the semester, students will take over this role. Throughout the semester, we will explore together what it means to study, teach, and research various forms of writing common in FYC. I will attempt to connect students' interests with conversations happening within Writing Studies, but in large part this course be shaped by the connections students most compelling.

In the 1960s, Richard Schickel wrote: "Disney has succeeded in putting a pair of Mickey Mouse ears on every developing personality in America.” In this class, we will examine the myths about America and Americans that accompanied those mouse ears—that we were a nation of dreamers and doers, that science and technology would usher in a “great big beautiful tomorrow,” that manifest destiny would march from the frontier (Frontierland and Adventureland) to the stars (Tomorrowland). As we do so, we will focus on Disney's visions of the past and the future as arguments about his present, studying the ways in which the Disney discourse was codified, multiplied, and disseminated during Walt's lifetime, and capitalized on after his death. We will look at a variety of Disney texts—animated and live action movies, themes parks, television shows, documentaries, speeches and interviews, merchandise—in the context of both their political and historical moment and Disney's real and imagined biography.

ENGL 5530 1 Mod Crit Theory Pr TR 09:00am 10:50am HO 215 Torry, R

This class will survey a number of modern and contemporary critical theories, including formalism, psychoanalysis, narratology, post-structuralism, feminist theory and perhaps, post-colonial theory. My interest is in moving toward an understanding of the essential concerns and methods of these approaches, with the understanding that each is derived from a long and complex intellectual and speculative tradition. We will be to some degree interested in application, but this will not be a cookbook, how to do it class. Rather most of our work will be in the discussion of theory as a complex mode of interpretive thought and the intellectual and political questions theory raises.

ENGL 5560 1 WW:MFA Poetry T 06:00pm 09:00pm HO 215 Northrop, K

Students not enrolled in the MFA program should bring a writing sample to the first class. Admission by permission of instructor.

ENGL 5560 2 WW:MFA Non-Fiction W 02:10pm 05:10pm RH 109 Lockwood, J

Students not enrolled in the MFA program should bring a writing sample to the first class. Admission by permission of instructor. This workshop explores religious/spiritual writing through the various genres (essays, meditations, memoirs, prayers, parables, poems, responsive readings, short stories and sermons) that writers have used to probe the ultimate, perennial questions of human existence, such as: Who am I; How can I be happy; What is the purpose of my life; and What do suffering and death mean? The driving themes of the course are words (e.g., what do we mean by divine, evil, faith, forgiveness, ritual, sacred, sin, soul, and worship?) and beliefs (truths upon which we are willing to act—and which must be understood backwards and lived forwards). Reading and writing assignments will be eclectic, challenging, traditional, novel, soothing, and provocative.

Students not enrolled in the MFA program should bring a writing sample to the first class. Admission by permission of instructor. An intensive graduate writing workshop for MFA students, although MA students may apply by submitting samples of work to the instructor ahead of registration. Students will write 3-4 short stories and responses to outside reading. Possibly some writing exercises to expand into new approaches to the work.
