The University of Wyoming’s Internationalization Steering Team engaged in an extensive and productive outreach effort to help develop its recommendation for institutional action. The next step is a peer review visit. A team of experts from across the country will meet with people at all levels of the institution, as well as members of Wyoming’s communities. Barbara Hill, senior associate at the American Council on Education and member of the site visit team said “all indications are that the University of Wyoming has already taken great steps toward developing a more global campus, and I look forward to learning more.”
