FALL 2017 Featured Classes

INST 2350 Introduction to Global Studies

A required class for INST majors. Turns an interdisciplinary eye on the contemporary world of consuming and global connections. Takes a broad overview of various approaches to the study of globalization, while exploring the links between consumption, civil society, social justice, and ecological integrity. Prof. Ruth Bjorkenwall, Two sections: MW 9-9:50am or 3:10-4pm, discussions Friday at either 9am or 10am

INST 4455/5455 Energy Security

This course evaluates the geopolitical and socioeconomic issues surrounding the roots of energy insecurity and the global challenge to provide adequate, affordable, and accessible energy. Topics of study include the questions of energy nationalism, climate security, import dependence and transportation insecurities, the future of fossil fuels and alternative energies. Prerequisites: Consent of instructor. POLS 2310 strongly recommended. Dr. Jean Garrison, T 3:10-5:40pm.

INST 4560/5560 Global Cities

Globalization accelerates urbanization processes and creates a new type of city, the global city. This course introduces debates over global cities, urban culture, new urban landscapes, urban planning practices, and social disparity. It uses case studies on the cities around the world to explore the diversity of global city formation processes. Cross listed with GEOG 4560, dual listed with INST 5560. Prerequisites: 9 hours of international studies or geography. Dr. Yi-Ling Chen, TTH 9:35-10:50am.

INST 4990/5990-01 Politics of Natural Resources in Latin America

This course will survey major trends in resource extraction, management, and conservation in Latin America, and the politics surrounding those trends. We will examine resources in the Americas from theoretical, social, political, and ecological perspectives through a variety of grounded case studies. Topics will include the role of the global political economy in resource extraction, indigenous environmental politics, environmental conflict and violence, Ecotourism, and nature-society theories. Dr. Zoe Pearson, TTH 1:20-2:35pm
