Laurie F. Maffly-Kipp, associate professor of religious studies at the University of North Carolina–Chapel Hill, is a well-respected scholar of the religious history of the American West and a recognized authority on Mormon history. She recently wrote the introduction to the Penguin Classics edition of the Book of Mormon (2008) and is currently at work on an introductory textbook on Mormonism. Her lecture, based on transcripts from the 1983 dedication of the LDS temple in Santiago, Chile, discusses the use of temple dedication ceremonies to indigenize the LDS Church in countries other than the United States of America. Maffly-Kipp asks, “How does that temple space become sacred?” and concludes that this transformation is accomplished through the ritual of dedication that instructs Mormons on who and where they are, and how they fit into sacred history.
