Heart Mountain for Students

Developed July 2007

By Rory Telander

This lesson plan was developed as part of a collaborative project with the Wyoming Partnership for Civic Education sponsored by the American Heritage Center and the College of Education at the University of Wyoming. Funding was provided by the U.S. Department of Education.
Introduction:

This lesson focuses on the Heart Mountain Relocation Center, near Cody, Wyoming, which was home to thousands of Japanese Americans during WW II. Following the attack on Pearl Harbor by the Japanese, President Franklin Roosevelt ordered the internment of Japanese Americans living on the West Coast of the United States. Internment camps were established at several locations, including Heart Mountain, Wyoming. This camp, located between Cody and Powell, was a stark contrast to the homes and countryside left behind by the internees. The people lived in hastily built barracks located on a treeless piece of ground. Winters were cold, windy and snowy. Photos in the appendices provide views of the camp and the surrounding area. The lesson provides teachers and students with primary source materials from the American Heritage Center at the University of Wyoming. These primary sources and their accompanying activities were chosen with both students and teachers in mind. Students should find them interesting and engaging. Teachers will find them appropriate for their classrooms and easy to use. Students will analyze the variety of opinions held by both Wyoming citizens and other Americans, evaluate the actions of government officials, and compare their own lives with those of students at Heart Mountain.

Objectives:

Students will be able to:
- Analyze the statements and opinions of non Japanese Americans
- Compare and contrast school life at Heart Mountain with their own
- Compare and contrast home life at Heart Mountain with their own
- Evaluate the opinions and feelings of Heart Mountain internees

Overview of Instructional Activities:

- Exploring primary source material
- Taking a stand and supporting it
- Comparing and contrasting poetry
- Writing a letter stating personal opinion
- Comparing and contrasting school life and attitudes
- Engaging in a Town Hall Meeting
- Writing a dialog and presenting it
- Drawing a sketch
- Expressing feelings through poetry, sketches, or song lyrics
Correlations to Wyoming State Standards:

This lesson addresses benchmarks and standards from the Wyoming Social Studies Content and Performance Standards. A list of the applicable benchmarks and standards is provided in Appendix C of the lesson plan.

Notes to the Instructor:

This lesson plan was created using a multi-sensory approach incorporating reading, writing, acting, drawing, and creativity. While specific activities are provided, teachers should feel free to modify and adapt the lesson to meet the needs of their individual classes. The lesson activities can be used as they are, or can be used as a starting point to develop their own activities. All of these activities do not have to be used for students to benefit from this study of Heart Mountain.

The rubrics should also be considered starting points. Teachers may want to adjust them to better meet the needs of their students.

Before using this lesson, instruction should be provided to students in the following areas:

- The meaning and use of primary and secondary sources
- The background of events leading up to Heart Mountain – the attack on Pearl Harbor, fear of further attacks, and President Roosevelt’s Executive Order. (See links below)
- Location and appearance of the land where the Heart Mountain Relocation Center was built. Photos included in appendix.

Instructor Guide:

It is critical that today’s students know what happened at Heart Mountain Relocation Center. This chapter of America’s past is worthy of study for the stories of the people who were confined there. The decisions made by government officials about Heart Mountain Relocation Center also need to be analyzed and assessed.

The American Heritage Center has numerous collections which describe the internment of Japanese Americans at Heart Mountain following the attack on Pearl Harbor. By using selected material from several collections, this lesson plan provides meaningful information that will engage all levels of learners and will touch each student.

The Nels Smith Collection reveals the feelings of Wyomingites as well as other Americans. Governor Smith received many letters which both supported and opposed the relocation of the Japanese Americans. These short letters, some highly inflammatory, will provide interesting and informative reading for students.

The Grace Thorson Brown Collection provides some photographs of interest to students. These photos show a Heart Mountain teacher, Ms. Brown, and the students in her class. By looking at the photos, students can see how the students dressed, how many students were in a class, and their attitudes.

The Heart Mountain High School produced a student newspaper called Heart Mountain Echoes. Reading an edition of this paper will provide students with school news. Students can examine the sports’ reports, classroom activities, and editorial comments. They also can see what types of tensions existed.

The Estelle Ishigo Collection contains sketches of camp scenes, many featuring children. Some of these scenes depict the harsh living conditions which faced the children, but also show the children playing and adjusting to their surroundings. These scenes will allow students to feel what it would have been like to live in that setting.

Two poems by Heart Mountain internees, (“That Damned Fence” and “Untitled Heart Mountain Poem”), were selected to show different attitudes toward camp life. By reading the poems, students will have an insight into the hearts of the authors.

Introducing the Lesson:

Read or play the recording of President Franklin Roosevelt’s “Day of Infamy” speech to the class. Ask students to discuss the feelings of the American citizens following the speech (older students may incorporate American feelings after 9/11/2001 into their discussions).

 Transitional Exercise:

Students will read FDR’s Executive Order 9066 which started the relocation of Japanese Americans. Ask the students to share one thing they have learned from the document.

Critical Thinking Exercises:

Writing Activities:

1. Taking a Stand and Supporting It: After reading through the letters written to Governor Nels Smith, take a stand on the question of relocating of Japanese Americans to Wyoming. As a U.S. citizen living at that time, do you oppose the relocation or do you welcome it? Write a short essay supporting your stance with evidence from the letters and from relevant parts of the U. S. Constitution and its Amendments.

   Extension: Read the letters to Governor Nels Smith; write a letter to the editor stating your position on the case and your supporting arguments.

2. Compare and Contrast: Read the two selected poems (“That Damned Fence” and “Untitled Heart Mountain Poem”). Students will discuss the attitudes of the two poets towards Heart Mountain. Students will write two or more paragraphs comparing and contrasting the two poems.
3. Writing a Friendly Letter: After looking at the photos of Grace Thorson Brown and her class, imagine you are one of her students. Write a letter to a friend back home telling them what life is like in the camp and/or at school, based on what you see in the photographs. Extension: Write a reply from your friend responding to your situation.

4. Compare and Contrast: After reading the school newspaper, Heart Mountain Echoes, compare and contrast Heart Mountain School with your school. What things were the same, what were different? How difficult would it have been for you to attend Heart Mountain School? Write two or more paragraphs. Extension: Write your own school newspaper article from the viewpoint of a student at Heart Mountain about school activities, i.e. athletics, academics, etc.

Artistic Activities:

1. Town Hall Meeting: You are hosting a town hall meeting with Governor Nels Smith to debate the issue of Japanese Americans being relocated to Wyoming. Divide the class into 12 groups, six will be pro-Japanese Americans and six will be anti-Japanese Americans. Each group will be given one of the letters sent to Governor Smith concerning the relocation. Students will read their letter and formulate their argument based on the contents. Students will assume the identity of the author of the letter and present their argument before the governor. Proceed with the debate, with the teacher acting as Governor Smith.

2. Interpreting Heart Mountain Sketches: Divide the students into groups of two. The students will look at several of the sketches in the Estelle Ishigo Collection. The students will choose a sketch to write about. They will imagine themselves as the characters in the sketch. As a team, they will write a dialog of the discussion between the children about camp life. They will practice the dialog with their partner and present it to the class.

3. Drawing to Portray a Scene Based on Poetry: After reading selected poems (“That Damned Fence” and “Untitled Heart Mountain Poem”), the students will draw their own sketch based on the content of one of the poems. Extension: Students can draw a series of scenes based on one of the poems.

Concluding the Lesson:

Students have experienced life at Heart Mountain through many mediums. As a concluding exercise, students will take the knowledge they have gained about life at Heart Mountain and turn it into creative expression.
Creating Poetry/Lyrics: Students will write an original poem or put new words to an existing tune to describe life at Heart Mountain based on information gathered from sketches, articles, letters, etc.

Supplemental/Additional Activities:

See extensions for Writing Activities 1, 3, & 4, and Artistic Activity 3.
Wyoming History Day: The documents used in this lesson and many more documents relating to Heart Mountain are available at the American Heritage Center for use in a Wyoming History Day project.
