

Cratypedes neglectus

Cratypedes neglectus occurs throughout the rangelands of Wyoming. Occasional records have been reported from northeastern Wyoming. It overwinters as eggs and there is evidence for a two-year life cycle in parts of Wyoming. Adults are present from early June through August. The species is reported as a mixed feeder that could damage rangelands in conjunction with other species. It is rarely abundant enough in Wyoming to cause damage.

Ref: Otte 1984, and Capinera and Sechrist 1982.