

Spharagemon bolli

Spharagemon bolli, a common grasshopper in Nebraska, is occasionally collected in the Black Hills of Wyoming and other areas in extreme eastern Wyoming. It prefers sunny forest openings with dry grasses. Eggs overwinter in the soil. Nymphs become adults in late July or early August. It is primarily a grass feeder but it is not considered a pest species in Wyoming.

Ref: Otte 1984, and Capinera and Sechrist 1982.