

WMST 2500: Gender & Society

Instructor: Samantha Vandermeade

Gender and Society is a discussion-based course in which we examine the intersections among gender, sexual orientation, race, ethnicity, socioeconomic class, age, and ability/disability. Students have opportunities to select historical and contemporary issues for research and discussion, and also work on textual and digital projects related to gender and social justice. The focus of the class is not only on developing strong academic research and writing skills, but on learning how to communicate effectively through websites, oral presentations, visual images, letters to the editor, and creative writing.