

Figure 5-19. With a two-way Foley catheter the uterus is perfused and flushing media (containing embryos) is returned to a collecting tube. By an additional air inlet, a balloon is inflated just inside the uterus; this prevents fluid from being lost through the cervix.